Feeding the street animals during corona virus pandemic
In collaboration with
Department of environment, Government of India

The coronavirus lockdown has forced the entire world indoors and humans are stuck amidst the Covid pandemic, most of them were engaged in their own problems. While humans had the privilege to plan for their upcoming meals for the days to come, not everyone was that lucky. Unavailability of food and water was impacting stray animals all over the country. They cannot voice their plight. It is our responsibility to provide sustenance in order to help them survive this crisis. So our Eco-club volunteers ensured that stray animals remain well-fed during the lockdown in their vicinity. Eco-club volunteers with their team work provide care, food and enrichments for the animals (5th Jan-15th March 2021). They also spread awareness through social media platforms and encourage the youth to do the same. 50 volunteers feed around 1000 street animals in various parts of the country every day to ensure they do not go hungry. This project played a major role in our student's life as it changed their perspective and their belief towards stray animals. In conclusion we can say that as being human it is our responsibility to show compassion by looking after them and fulfilling their basic needs as they are also a part of our environment.
