Eco-club students, driven by their commitment to environmental well-being, organized a meaningful initiative in their native places on the eve of 2nd October called "Green Roots: Plantation Drive and Plastic Pledge." This campaign encompassed a dual mission. The Eco-club students undertook a plantation drive first symbolizing the growth of green consciousness within communities. Students enthusiastically planted saplings, nurturing the idea of sustainability at the very grassroots of their native areas as well as on the campus. Secondly, the initiative addressed the pervasive issue of plastic usage by promoting its responsible and sustainable use and taking a pledge. Students advocated for minimizing single-use plastic and encouraged alternatives that align with ecological balance. Through this combined effort, the Eco-club students aimed to cultivate a culture of environmental mindfulness and sustainable living within their communities, fostering a positive impact on local ecosystems and global ecological concerns. A total of 20 students actively participated in this drive.
