TEACHER : Dr.UPENDRA KUMAR

UNIT DURATION LECTUR,S TOPIC

I 05-02-2024 TO 29-02-2024 , Society and Nature , This course proposes to examine the history of change in human-nature interactions. It unpacks standard environmental narratives which reduce environmental concerns to pollution and global warming, on the one hand, and human-nature harmony in pre- colonial era on the other. This will help students understand the usually invisible interplay of political, economic and ideological factors on questions of nature and natural resources. In what ways were environmental concerns mitigated by the class imprint of aspirational consumerism? This course also draws attention to the call of 'national interest' while addressing contemporary environmental concerns, often designated by specialists as anthropocene.

Understanding Texts, Rituals and Orality in Indian History

This course will seek to provide students with skills in using a variety of archives, namely documents, ritual practice and performance, in which historians regard the underlying structures and meanings of documents, rituals and oral expressions as historically significant. Here students will be invited to study critical research that deals with these issues and undertake case studies that draw out the value of these archives.

Organise archival or field work relating to historical research. Contextualise sources in a meaningful and critical manner. Analyse texts, point out ethnography of ritual practices and performances, and use oral narratives for historical purposes. Demonstrate a variety of vocational areas like administration, development, culture and art, economy.
